Paying Tribute to Our Veterans

We are proud of all of Alaska's men and women in uniform and our veterans, and the State of Alaska and Department of Military & Veterans Affairs makes it a priority to offer support to you, your families, and your mission in Alaska and around the world.

I recently signed several pieces of legislation into law that will help veterans, military members, and our disaster preparedness efforts. Senate Bill 136 promotes economic opportunity near military installations and provides tax credits to employers who hire veterans. This legislation also requires Alaska's Division of Motor Vehicles to provide a veteran designation and U.S. flag replica on a state-issued veteran identification card or driver license, making it possible for veterans to seek benefits they have earned without the burden of carrying additional paperwork, such as copies of discharge papers. I also signed legislation to provide copies of death certificates to families of a deceased veteran at no charge.

Additionally, the Veterans Affairs Office was relocated from Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson into the Anchorage community to ensure easier access to our 77,631 veterans and their 89,000 dependents. We will continue to do all we can to support our military members and their families.

Our veterans' service underpins Alaska's military heritage, and I have been honored to participate in events this spring and summer honoring these important heroes. From Alaska's Vietnam veterans, to our honored World War II veterans, to members of Alaska's Territorial Guard, to those who have served and are serving in current conflicts around the world, words cannot adequately express our thanks for your honorable service in defense of freedom. On behalf of all Alaskans, thank you to all our service members, past and present. We pray for your safety, and pledge our unwavering support to you and your families.

Deployment Well Wishes. Serving Those Who Have Served

Thank a veteran. Honor a veteran.
Hire a veteran.

Veterans deserve our respect and a debt of gratitude. These amazing service members and their families have served our state and nation to protect the freedoms we love, often at great sacrifice.

Between 1942 and 1947, Alaska Territorial Guard members were willing to make the ultimate sacrifice to defend our state against the Japanese in World War II. These men and women banded together at high risk to themselves to defend their families and their land and did so without a second thought. This is what makes us a great state and nation.

Ranging in age from 11 to 80 years old, ATG members risked everything, and unfortunately, until recently, many of these veterans were never honored for their service and sacrifice.

However, in July, I had the opportunity to memorialize members of the greatest generation when I traveled to Bethel with members of the Department of Military & Veterans Affairs to see a bronze statue of an ATG member unveiled on a pedestal outside the Veterans Memorial Cemetery. It faces 270 degrees in the direction from which the initial threat was seen in the 1940s and honors those who protected our nation from attack by the Japanese.

Today, we have many Soldiers exemplifying the same spirit of the ATG, many from western Alaska who serve our nation, not only here in Alaska, but across the globe.

Alaska Army National Guard members from B Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 143rd Infantry Regiment and Alaska Air National Guard members from the 176th Wing are currently deployed to Afghanistan in support of Operation Enduring Freedom. They fight for the same principles the ATG stood proudly for, to protect our nation and uphold the American ideals.

These veterans and citizen-Soldiers will return home from Afghanistan and return to their communities. As veterans, they bring incredible skills, leadership and value to our state. They are true heroes who heard the call to serve, and now we need to honor their service by connecting them to jobs, education and opportunity as many adjust back to civilian life.

Through the Alaska National Guard Yellow Ribbon program, we reach out to our state veterans to educate them on jobs, training, health care, funeral honors, transition services education entitlements and benefits. However, with 250 homeless veterans living throughout the state, we need everyone to take an active role in recognizing the sacrifices each veteran has made. It's up to each one of us to make every effort to thank, honor and hire veterans for they represent the best of all Alaskans. ■

Arctic Search and Rescue Put to Test

Story and photos by Staff Sergeant Karima Turner, DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Alaska National Guardsmen performed arctic search and rescue training in early May, testing skills and equipment during Operation Ardent Sentry 2012.

Ardent Sentry is an international exercise focused on providing defense support to civil authorities and is used to validate existing plans, policies, and procedures, including federal, state and regional response plans. Events took place in Alaska, North Dakota, Oregon, Texas, Connecticut and Nova Scotia.

Here in Alaska, as part of the exercise, Joint Task Force Alaska sent pararescuemen from the Alaska Air National Guard's 121st Rescue Squadron and paratroopers from the Alaska Army National Guard's C Company, 1st Battalion, 297th Battlefield Surveillance Brigade to respond to a major aircraft crash with passengers onboard in a remote area of the state.

"This training is really important to make sure that such complicated rescues are successful," said Senior Airman Robert Bowler, 121st Rescue Squadron, survival evasion resistance escape specialist. "It's a low-frequency event, but it's high risk because of the kind of environment we're operating in and the complex nature of getting equipment and personnel to that kind of remote site."

Upon notification, the pararescuemen and the paratroopers reported to Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson where a C-17 Globemaster III and C-130 Hercules were standing by loaded with necessary personnel and heavy equipment required for an arctic SAR mission. After a short flight, pararescuemen and paratroopers leaped from the aircraft, and arctic SAR equipment was dropped to assist simulated casualties.

"The Long Range Surveillance Company has a mission to support the 121st Rescue Squadron and provide them with manpower in the event of an arctic search and rescue," said First Sergeant Michael Grunst, C Company, 1st Battalion, 297th Battlefield Surveillance Brigade. "We jumped in with them and set up a casualty collection point near a crashed C-130 with 30 survivors. From there, we started providing ground support to the pararescuemen by setting up tents, heaters, generators, and critical infrastructure."

Within a couple of hours of their boots hitting the ground, the pararescuemen had located, triaged and treated all of the injured victims who were scattered throughout the woods.

"Joint exercises are critical," Grunst said. "When you're in Iraq or Afghanistan or any number of places, you've got Air Force, Army, Marines, Navy, even Coast Guard. It's a joint effort, a team effort, and by coordinating and working together, it makes us more efficient when we respond to situations like this in the future."

Upon completion of the arctic SAR portion of the exercise, the paratroopers prepared all of the equipment to be sling-loaded off the site by a UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter.

"It was a really unique opportunity; it was the first time we've ever sling-loaded an Argo [amphibious all-terrain, off-road vehicle] up here in Alaska," Grunst said. "The training is going to help us both in our state and federal missions." ■

Army Guardsmen Deploy to Sinai

By Specialist Balinda O'Neal,

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ...

Five Alaska Army National Guardsmen deployed to Sinai, Egypt, in June for approximately five to seven months in support of the Multinational Force Observers and Civilian Observers Unit missions.

In Sinai, the Soldiers from F Company, 207th Theater Aviation Company are providing support by performing aerial observation and verification flights throughout the border region between Egypt and Israel.

"This is the unit's fourth deployment," said Captain Carl A. Catone, F Company, 207th TAC commander. "We are looking forward to assisting the MFO organization with its mission."

The MFO and COU supervise the 1979 Treaty of Peace between Egypt and Israel. The purpose of the mission is to verify implementation of peace treaty limitations on military personnel, armaments and infrastructure.

The deployed Soldiers hail from Anchorage, Palmer and Wasilla. ■

Airmen sharpen skills in Interior Alaska

By Airman Francine St. Laurent,
168th Air Refueling Wing Public Affairs

EIELSON AIR FORCE BASE, Alaska ... Alaska National Guardsmen from the 168th Security Forces Squadron conducted Military Operations in Urban Terrain training at the North Pole Fire Department's training facility in May.

This is the second year that the 168th SFS has held its annual hands-on MOUT training in North Pole, taking advantage of the empty building to practice search and seizure techniques in a simulated urban environment, according to Technical Sergeant Brian Zeisel, 168th Security Forces Squadron 3rd squad leader.

"We're trying to make sure that we sharpen our skills, because they are perishable," said Zeisel, who was among the leadership instructing during the exercise. "This is where you make mistakes, correct mistakes and make sure that if we have to do this in real life, at least we've gone through it enough times to have a good understanding of what's going on."

For many traditional security forces Guardsmen, MOUT training constitutes a major part of their annual training and is a refresher course on skills they acquired in technical school.

But this training is unique because it gives the Airmen hands-on training versus just discussing it in a classroom environment, according to Senior Airman Chase Bowser, 168th Security Forces Squadron security forces specialist.

"We're actually going through clearing buildings as opposed to sitting in a briefing, doing PowerPoints, going through the scenarios and then practicing in an empty bay," Bowser said.

For others, MOUT training is an opportunity to mesh civilian and military careers and spark the idea of new career possibilities while reviewing techniques.

"People in our squadron have a lot of different skills from the civilian world that we can incorporate into our training on the military side," said Zeisel, who also works as an Alaska State Trooper. "It's really valuable and a nice benefit to have, and I think it gives the Guard a big advantage." ■

Airmen return from Kuwait

By Staff Sergeant N. Alicia Goldberger, 176th Wing Public Affairs

JOINT BASE ELMENDORF-RICHARDSON, Alaska ... Alaska Air National Guardsmen from the 176th Civil Engineer Squadron returned here in June following a six-month tour in Kuwait.

"To say I am proud of our accomplishments is an understatement," said Lieutenant Colonel Ed Soto, commander of the 176th Civil Engineer Squadron.

"In one year, civil engineer Air Guardsmen helped move an Air National Guard Base, passed a compliance inspection and deployed to support contingency operations worldwide."

The Alaska Guardsmen were assigned to the 386th Expeditionary Civil Engineer Squadron alongside members of the 119th Civil Engineer Squadron from Fargo, N.D.

According to Master Sergeant Brian Lewis, the 176th Wing members worked hard with their peers to improve the base.

"One of our main goals was to try to make everything better, smoother, more efficient than when we arrived," Lewis said. "There's a sense of urgency and importance when you're deployed."

The Guardsmen, some on their first deployment, worked in their trained skills including electrical, power production, mechanical, utilities, heavy equipment, structures, engineering, production control and pest management.

Specifically, some of the unit's accomplishments included the production control section's saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars acquiring essential supplies from the drawdown in Iraq; the heating, ventilation and air conditioning section keeping systems operating in temperatures ranging from 35–110 degrees; and the heavy equipment shop improving security by building up berms and digging trenches.

"It's great to be home," Lewis said, "but there's quite an adjustment we have to make, and there are aspects I will miss." ■

Operation Arctic Care Serves Alaska's Rural Residents

Arctic Aviation. Pilots prepare to land a pair of Alaska Army National Guard UH-60 Black Hawk helicopters at the Alaska Army National Guard Army Aviation Support Facility in Nome after supporting Arctic Care operations in Brevig Mission.

Story and photos by Major Guy Hayes, DMVA Public Affairs

NOME, Alaska ... In its 18th year, the nation's largest recurring joint medical readiness exercise, Operation Arctic Care, provided topnotch medical care in remote areas of Western Alaska in April.

More than 285 National Guardsmen, reservists and active-duty service members braved the winter elements to bring care to Alaskans in need where miles of wilderness separate villages in our nation's last frontier.

"We assisted 6,367 people and performed 10,750 procedures," said Alaska Air National Guard Lieutenant Colonel Sharolyn Lange, task force medical commander for Operation Arctic Care 2012. "This was also the largest number of participants and sites visited in the history of Arctic Care."

With no roads connecting villages blanketed in snow, transporting supplies, equipment and personnel to 15 locations in two weeks required dedicated planning, flexibility and knowledgeable professionals.

"Task force aviation was critical to our ability to travel to each village and provide medical, dental, optometry and veterinary care," Lange said. "We couldn't do our job without their daily support getting supplies and personnel into each of the Arctic Care villages."

worked tirelessly to get the right people and equipment to wherever they were needed on C-23 Sherpas and UH-60 Black Hawks.

"On an average day, we moved about 40 people, but we moved even more supplies than people to the villages, so they had the equipment they needed," said Captain Peter Pagni, UH-60 Black Hawk pilot, Alaska Army National Guard.

With personnel traveling to the region from across the nation, service members embraced the opportunity to train, provide medical care and serve here in the land of the midnight sun.

"This was an opportunity of a lifetime," said Captain Wade Kinshell, medical detachment registered nurse, Colorado Army National Guard. "It was a wonderful experience, and the kids were the best. They were happy to see us, and we were happy to see their smiles."

Kinshell, who served in Brevig Mission, oversaw medical operations, trained medics, ensured providers had what they needed and assisted with procedures.

"We were happy we could provide medical, dental, optometry and vet care here," Kinshell said. "We tried to take it all in and be respectful of their heritage and Mongolians Observe Exercise. culture. We ate seal and listened to stories about their people, tradition and culture; it was unbelievable.”

Like Kinshella, Arctic Care has been a career highlight for many service members and a unique opportunity to help provide basic services that many of us take for granted each day.

“The Navy has a team called NOSTRA, a deployable optical fabrication squad from Virginia,” Lange said. “They made glasses for people the same day as their appointment and sent the glasses back out to the villages in less than 24 hours.”

“We processed 460 glasses in the first five days,” said Petty Officer First Class Quentin Moncrieft, NOSTRA technician, U.S. Navy. “Once we received a request via fax in Nome, we processed the order quickly.”

From start to finish, Moncrieft, one of four NOSTRA service members from Yorktown, Va., was able to make new glasses in only about 10 minutes, saving rural residents a significant amount of time and money.

“Normally, patients would have to travel from their village to Nome or Anchorage to visit an optometrist,” said Petty Officer 2nd Class Aaron Swan, NOSTRA technician, U.S. Navy. “The transportation out of their village, cost of visiting with an optometrist, cost of the glasses and then travel home saves them more than $1,000.”

“It was definitely rewarding, because we were able to contribute and give back to the community,” Moncrieft said. “I’m really glad I had the opportunity to be a part of Operation Arctic Care and help the people of Alaska.”

Helping people in Western Alaska wasn’t the only mission of Arctic Care 2012.

Helping Rural Pets. Captain Brooke Henderson, left, veterinarian, 993rd Medical Detachment, U.S. Army Reserve, performs an eye exam on Wilson, a Maltese-mix puppy, in Nome while U.S. Army Reserve Sergeant Andrew King, 949th Medical Detachment, holds him during the procedure. The veterinarian teams performed 2,487 procedures during Arctic Care 2012.

For a few service members, the most rewarding part of this mission was helping their four-legged friends.

“Taking care of animals is really important with canine parvovirus, so it’s key we get them vaccinated,” said Captain Jeff Richards, veterinarian, 993rd Medical Detachment, U.S. Army Reserve, prior to performing one of 2,487 veterinarian procedures during Operation Arctic Care 2012. “We used some injectable protocols, which is a little bit different than some of the gas anesthesia, so this was good training for us to try some different anesthetic techniques while we were up here.”

Training for future deployments and providing medical professionals meaningful work is exactly why service members travel to Alaska each spring to assist citizens of rural Alaska during Arctic Care, according to Lange.

“Arctic Care is a phenomenal training opportunity in a non-lethal environment,” Lange said. “It provides the opportunity to deploy with your equipment, move into a site, and provide safe and effective care while building teams among sister services. It’s the best possible training and an amazing experience for everyone involved.”

Sponsored by the Innovative Readiness Training program under the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Reserve Affairs, Arctic Care 2012 brought health care and veterinary support to residents in the Bering Strait and Norton Sound regions of Western Alaska. ■

Ready to Serve. Arctic Care participants sit onboard an Air Force C-17 Globemaster III at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson before heading to Nome. Medical professionals from the Alaska National Guard, Arizona National Guard, Colorado National Guard, Army Reserves, Navy Reserves and active duty spent two weeks in April providing medical care to Alaskans in 16 remote communities.

Alaska State Defense Force Supports Arctic Care

By Brigadier General Roger E. Holl,
Alaska State Defense Force

JOINT BASE ELMENDORF-RICHARDSON, Alaska ... The Alaska State Defense Force augmented the Alaska National Guard in April during Operation Arctic Care 2012, receiving highly relevant training during the medical readiness exercise.

With more than 285 military medical professionals traveling to Nome to provide care in 16 remote locations to underserved populations, accountability of personnel was crucial to ensuring safety during the two-week mission and was accomplished through the Joint Reception Staging Onward Movement Integration.

Alaska State Defense Force personnel were trained on JSROI, and they served at the Joint Mobility Complex on Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson and in Nome to assist the National Guard in processing incoming personnel for the exercise. Their functions included palletizing equipment for the aircraft, food preparation for incoming troops and in-processing personnel.

Additionally during the exercise, five Alaska State Defense Force officers participated in advanced joint operations training for service in the Joint Operations Center. As such, these officers made the Joint Operations Center aware of Alaska State Defense Force personnel and assets during the planning of a military response to a disaster. Nine Alaska State Defense Force personnel were also trained during a pandemic table top exercise, the Team Alaska pandemic response training.

Alaska State Defense Force participants noted the team-building benefits of working side by side with the National Guard during Arctic Care.

In all, the Alaska State Defense Force had 25 people supporting Operation Arctic Care 2012 or participating directly in the exercise. ■

176TH WING

Largest Deployment Since 2003

By Captain John Callahan, 176th Wing Public Affairs

JOINT BASE ELMENDORF-RICHARDSON, Alaska ... More than 180 citizen-Airmen of the Alaska Air National Guard's 176th Wing deployed to Afghanistan in May in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

The deployment marks the wing's single largest deployment of personnel since 2003. It is also the wing's second large-scale deployment from Joint Base Elmendorf-

Richardson since the Guard organization relocated here in February 2011 as part of the Base Realignment and Closure process.

The deployed Airmen are primarily maintenance crews from the wing's 176th Maintenance Group and rescue personnel from the wing's three rescue units: HH-60 Pave Hawk helicopter pilots and crew from the 210th Rescue Squadron, HC-130 Hercules pilots and crew from the 211th, and pararescuemen and combat rescue officers from the 212th. Together with a handful of expeditionary combat support personnel from other 176th Wing units, the deployers form a highly capable and versatile rescue package.

In Afghanistan, the rescuers are pursuing their primary wartime mission of combat search and rescue. This often involves challenging casualty-evacuation missions – that is, flying into “hot” combat zones, frequently under fire, to pull wounded coalition service members to safety and transport them to a treatment facility within one hour. The maintenance crews are supporting this vital work by keeping the rescuers’ planes and helicopters ready for flight at a moment’s notice.

“We are very, very proud of our deployed men and women,” said the wing’s commander, Colonel Scott Wenke. “These are highly trained and motivated professionals doing an outstanding job in support of coalition efforts to help the Afghan people build a better future for their country. I thank them for their service and look forward to their safe return.”

Since 1952, the 176th Wing has effectively served Alaskans at home and American interests abroad. It has supported large-scale deployments each year since 2003.

One of the largest and busiest wings in the Air National Guard, the 176th Wing also provides alert rescue and air defense capabilities in support of the 11th Air Force and Alaska North American Aerospace Defense Command Region. ■

MADE IN ALASKA

Today you have a war on your hands. But the day will come when you are home for good. The kisses will be real, not over the Internet, hand-in-hand in a dimly lit room...when the candles shine on a table set for two. We long for the day when our Phantom Warrior® flashlights are used covertly in a tent, in your backyard telling tall tales; when your children use a Phantom Hawk® to check for monsters under their bunkbeds; and a BellaBeam® serves valiantly at the bottom of a trick-or-treat bag. But until that day comes, we'll continue making them to bring our Soldiers home safe. And we pledge to make them here in the USA where every Phantom family member appreciates that this is our service to America, to our freedom, and to you.

Guardsmen Discuss State Partnership, Policy and Cybersecurity

DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Key officials in policy from the Department of Defense met with leaders and officers of the Alaska National Guard in April to learn more about the Guard's partnership with Mongolia and to discuss security of computer networks and Asia-Pacific affairs in advance of a DoD trip to Asia.

Principal deputy undersecretary of defense for policy Dr. James N. Miller and five of his advisors stopped by the Alaska National Guard armory on Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson for three hours to share their insights on East Asian relations and policy, as well as evolving cybersecurity issues. The Alaska National Guard was able to share its experience on the relationship with Mongolia as part of the National Guard Bureau's State Partnership Program.

The partnership between the Alaska National Guard and Mongolia, formally established in 2003, is considered one of the premiere and most successful relationships of the 63 active state partnerships across the nation.

"Our partnership is a success because we have a great partner country in Mongolia, and the senior leadership there supports the State Partnership Program," said Major Wayne Don, State Partnership Program director. "In addition, we have deployed into combat with the Mongolians, so our partnership is based on mutually shared hardships, trust, respect and genuine appreciation for what we both provide to the relationship."

Miller said that the State Partnership Program is viewed in Washington, D.C., as "highly effective and successful," and he is supportive of continuing the program.

An officers professional development session also was held with seven majors from the Alaska Army National Guard and three majors from the Alaska Air National Guard where the discussion was able to delve deeper into the issue of computer network security and to stress the importance of sustaining and reinforcing the United States position in the Asia-Pacific region.

"As majors, these officers are at the beginning of taking their experience above a tactical level and going into a strategic realm," said Brigadier General Mike Bridges, assistant adjutant general – Alaska Army National Guard. "This particular opportunity to speak with high level members of the Department of Defense gives these majors a direct shot at strategic level discussions regarding issues in our region. They are all really sharp officers."

Upon leaving to catch the flight to Asia, Miller extended his compliments to the Alaska National Guard for hosting an enjoyable visit with insightful conversation.

"It was a great day to get to speak with such a thoughtful and knowledgeable group; this is an incredibly impressive group," Miller said. "In my years of working at DoD, I've come to expect this level, but yet I'm still impressed, although not surprised, every time I am out in the field and get to meet the men and women of our military." ■

Homeland Security & Emergency Management

Providing Essential Services

DURING A DISASTER

Power Outage. Natural and man-made disasters can interrupt power generation, power transmission or delivery of fuel used by electrical plants. The ability to provide temporary power to emergency shelters, medical facilities and emergency response structures helps keep people in their communities and expedites the restoration of regular services.

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... The normal flow of goods and services which we rely on – food, water, power, medical care and communications – are often taken for granted, until they are gone. The ability to temporarily provide essential services during and after a disaster is critical to an effective response and a successful recovery.

In Alaska, factors such as weather, logistics and resource availability compound the challenge of restoring essential services following a disaster. The state continues to build its capability to provide disaster-related essential services through a variety of sources, including funds sought by Alaska Governor Sean Parnell and approved by the legislature.

“Restoring essential services disrupted by a natural or man-made disaster is a priority so people can remain in or return quickly to their community,” said John Madden, director of the Division of Homeland Security & Emergency Management. “Bridging the gap between disruption and full restoration enables families to remain in their communities. People are the heart of any community. With essential goods and services in place, neighbors who are unaffected are also able to help impacted neighbors.”

DHS&EM recognized the need for versatile equipment to meet the demands of Alaska’s diverse environments in both rural and urban communities. A significant investment in equipment to support essential emergency communications, power, water and food has been made.

“For both communication and water purification units, our larger vehicles and trailers can support response and recovery in large urban areas impacted by catastrophic disasters. Smaller portable units provide essential services in small remote communities,” said Bryan Fisher, operations section chief for DHS&EM. “Alaska’s small and large communities, rural and urban settings, severe weather and various modes of transportation preclude a one-size-fits-all solution."

Feeding the Masses. A good, hot meal can do wonders for an evacuee's spirits. Volunteer groups such as the American Red Cross of Alaska do a tremendous job of feeding displaced Alaskans. The state's food supplies will be able to feed thousands of people.

The investment by the state in newer emergency equipment and technologies is of tremendous value to Alaska. The equipment is continuously in use to support real-world missions, exercises and partnered collaborations.

The Mobile Emergency Operations Center has been used by the Alaska State Troopers as the Arctic Man command and control center for the last three years, by the Alaska Mountain Rescue Group during several training exercises and by the Division of Forestry during two wildfire responses.

"Allowing partners to use the MEOC has battle-tested the equipment and allowed the state to evaluate its effectiveness. Knowing the equipment's strengths and weaknesses will allow us to get the most out of it during a large-scale disaster," Madden said.

DHS&EM has also positioned four of the state's eight rapid communication backpacks with Alaska State Troopers in Anchorage and Fairbanks for swift deployment anywhere in the state.

More recently, personnel from the Department of Environmental Conservation, Anchorage Water and Wastewater Utility, the Alaska National Guard, and the Division of Forestry were trained on new, portable water purification units, thereby ensuring Individuals and families should plan and prepare for disasters as well. The table below compares the equipment families should gather to the state's equipment and supplies. For more preparedness information, visit www.ready.alaska.gov.

Personal Emergency Kit vs. State Emergency Equipment/Supplies

ITEM	PERSONAL EMERGENCY KIT	STATE EMERGENCY EQUIPMENT/SUPPLIES
Water	One gallon of water per person per day for drinking, food preparation and hygiene.	4 x 1,800-gallon portable fresh water purification units 1 5,500-gallon fresh water purification unit 1 2,200-gallon salt water purification unit 1 30,000-gallon salt water purification trailer
Power	An electrical generator or an indoor safe heat source. A flashlight.	26 electrical generators: 2 x 25kw, 2 x 50kw, 2 x 75kw, 3 x 100kw, 3 x 125kw, 3 x 175kw, 3 x 200kw, 3 x 250kw, 1 x 350kw, 1 x 500kw that multiple end users have the knowledge, skills and training on the equipment.

DHS&EM is currently awaiting the delivery of 24 electrical generators, modified to operate in Arctic environments. The generators can temporarily replace all or part of a large community's electrical power supply, providing power to critical infrastructure such as shelters, hospitals or first responders.

DHS&EM is also working with the Red Cross, Alaska food banks and other food-related organizations to develop a comprehensive plan to manage the state's emergency food resources. Similar to the emergency water, electrical and communication capabilities, a scalable approach will also be implemented for food supplies. This food assurance project is state funded in fiscal year 2013.

The goals of DHS&EM are to obtain the best equipment for use in Alaska, test and continually refine capabilities, and cross-train with partners on equipment operations. This will ensure a strong and supportive emergency response, comprehensive enough to meet the wide-ranging missions across the state.

"The best equipment and the finest supplies in the world are useless unless people can quickly put them to work where they are needed," Fisher said. "We are working hard to train our staff and partners so they have the knowledge and experience to use these supplies and equipment to their fullest." ■

First Female State Command Sergeant Major

By Sergeant Michelle Brown,
134th Public Affairs Detachment

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... The Alaska Army National Guard is composed of 1,900 citizen-Soldiers; of those, only 320 are women.

It seemed natural for one woman who grew up with three brothers to join an organization that is mostly male. Some may call her a “tomboy” since she likes hunting, fishing, shooting a variety of weapons and working in the maintenance field.

But those who have the honor to serve with Pam call her Command Sergeant Major Harrington, an American Soldier, a warrior and a leader.

With more than 25 years of experience in military administration, logistics and maintenance, along with a tour to Afghanistan, where she was awarded the Bronze Star Medal, Harrington was selected to be the first female state command sergeant major for the Alaska Army National Guard, effective June 1.

“Command Sergeant Major Pamela Harrington was selected because she has demonstrated through her professionalism, leadership and hard work that she is one of the best senior noncommissioned officers that the Alaska National Guard has ever had,” said Command Sergeant Major Gordon Choate, senior enlisted advisor to the adjutant general, Alaska National Guard. “It was a very easy choice to pick her as number one.”

Choate, the outgoing state command sergeant major, said the Alaska Army National Guard is a diverse organization with many opportunities for all Soldiers.

As the state command sergeant major, Harrington will advise Brigadier General Mike Bridges, commander of the Alaska Army National Guard, on enlisted related issues, such as enforcement of policies, training and quality of life.

“I’ve watched her advance through the ranks of senior noncommissioned officer leadership,” Bridges said. “She is highly confident, highly qualified, and I trust her implicitly to be the standards bearer for the enlisted corps.”

Harrington said she appreciates the faith and confidence Bridges has placed in her by selecting her to be a part of his command team and looks forward to the challenge.

“I know that this is a team assignment, and I am but one part of this team,” said Harrington. “My ability to enhance and complement the team performance is what is critical.”

As the top senior enlisted Soldier, Harrington’s goal is to know her Soldiers and to take care of them.

Pamela Harrington. Alaska Army National Guard State Command Sergeant Major Pamela Harrington is the first female state command sergeant major for the organization. She has more than 25 years of experience with military administration, logistics and maintenance.

*“I have a passion for the Alaska Army National Guard and for what I do,
which is why I am still here after 25 years.”*

—Pamela Harrington

“I must always remember what the challenges were to me as a Soldier coming up through the ranks and constantly talk to Soldiers at every level and find out firsthand how well the leaders of our organization are doing at communicating with the force,” Harrington said.

Her advice to lower enlisted Soldiers or to those who are striving to excel in the Alaska Army National Guard is to never compromise standards or your integrity to get ahead.

“I have a passion for the Alaska Army National Guard and for what I do, which is why I am still here after 25 years,” said Harrington. “I love being a part of this team, and I want every Soldier to have that passion.” ■

ANCHORAGE, Alaska ... Wells Fargo Alaska Regional President Richard Strutz signed a statement of support for the Guard and Reserve in April.

The statement of support confirms that Wells Fargo in Alaska joins other employers in pledging that:

- It fully recognizes, honors, and enforces the Uniformed Services Employment and Re-Employment Rights Act
- Its managers and supervisors will have the tools they need to effectively manage those employees who serve in the Guard and Reserve.
- It will continually recognize and support our country's service members and their families in peace, in crises and in war.

"Today, supportive employers are critical to maintaining the strength and readiness of the nation's Guard and Reserve units," said Rich Owen, of the Alaska Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve. "I am asking all Alaska employers to take a look at their current human resources policies to incorporate policies supportive of Guard and Reserve employees. Many Alaska employers provide 'above and beyond' support with pay differential to offset the loss of wages and extension of health care benefits, which complement coverage provided by the military, when their employees are mobilized."

"Wells Fargo proudly supports all of our Alaska team members serving in the National Guard and Reserve," Strutz said. "We recognize that our team members have made incredible personal sacrifices to defend our freedom, support their families and help our Alaska customers succeed financially. Thank you to all of our Alaska veterans and active duty service members. It's an honor to serve those who serve our country."

In 2011, Wells Fargo was honored with the Secretary of Defense Employer Support Freedom Award. The Freedom Award is the Department of Defense's highest recognition given to employers for exceptional support of their employees serving in the National Guard and Reserve. Wells Fargo stood out among 4,049 nominations submitted by National Guard and Reserve service members or their families. Freedom Award recipients distinguish themselves by going to extraordinary lengths to support their military employees.

"As a nearly 32-year Guardsman, I have seen first-hand the difference between non-supportive versus supportive employers in their direct impact on National Guard and Reserve personnel in the conduct of our missions," said Brigadier General Mike Bridges, commander, Alaska Army National Guard. "These signed and visual statements of support are a huge and positive symbol to all of America's citizen-Soldiers that what we do is important to our nation and its safety and prosperity." ■

Guardian Angels Train with Marines Before Afghanistan Deployment

Pave Hawk to the Rescue.
A pararescuer is hoisted up into an HH-60G Pave Hawk during Exercise Mojave Viper in March. This exercise prepared the Guardian Angel teams of the 210th, 211th and 212th Rescue Squadrons, Alaska Air National Guard, and the 3rd Battalion 8th Marines forces for real-world combat and also brought members of the sister services closer together.

In for Landing. Staff Sergeant Jacob Inman, flight engineer with the 210th Rescue Squadron, Alaska Air National Guard, calls an approach to a "brown out" landing during Exercise Mojave Viper in March. The 210th, 211th and 212th Rescue Squadrons, 176th Wing, Alaska Air National Guard, participated in the exercise with the 3rd Battalion 8th Marines, Camp Lejeune, N.C., before deploying together to Afghanistan.

MCAGCC TWENTYNINE PALMS, Calif. ... Airmen and Marines ran through multiple strenuous real-world scenarios during Exercise Mojave Viper at Twentynine Palms in March to prepare for their summer deployment together.

"It was really great to get this opportunity to train with the Marines, to have the opportunity to see how they work, and for them to see how we will work in a joint environment before we deploy," said First Lieutenant Ben Leonard, HH-60G Pave Hawk combat search and rescue helicopter pilot with the 210th Rescue Squadron, Alaska Air National Guard.

This training was necessary to not only provide muscle memory for the Guardian Angel teams but also to strengthen the bond between sister services.

"A critical part of our training is being proficient at brown-out landings," said Lieutenant Colonel Tom Bolin, 210th Rescue Squadron commander. "The sand here is very fine and light, causing a severe dust cloud, called a 'brown out,' that makes landing a very challenging team effort. We will face these conditions in Afghanistan, which is why it is critical for us to become proficient at these landings. We need to get in and out of the landing zone quickly, to minimize our exposure to the enemy."

There was somewhat of a language barrier between the Marines and the Airmen. The training afforded the opportunity needed for Airmen to familiarize themselves with common practices and operating procedures in order to keep Airmen and Marines on the same page.

"It's better for us to work out the language barriers in a training environment than to hear it for the first time in combat," Bolin said. "Trying to translate each other's jargon during high-risk rescue missions is confusing and wastes valuable time."

Knowing the other service's lingo went a long way when building a common understanding for mission success.

"It's definitely not as simple as it sounds," said Captain Matt Kirby, a combat rescue officer with the 212th Rescue Squadron. "It's a combination of coordination with all units involved – timeliness in arrival for medical needs, accuracy of location, efficiency in getting to the patients on the ground, all while there's a tunnel of sand and sometimes bullets flying around the helicopter. Since we will be in a hazardous location, dodging and preventing any further attacks as we try to get the patients who need medical attention out of the danger zone are also in the mix."

Building trust with the Marines was another advantage to this training. Pararescuemen need to be able to keep the patients from going into shock. Anything that can help, even if it's building a training relationship, is worth it.

"They know what they are doing, and they know how to get it done quick," said Marine Private Nicholas Lara, 8th Engineer Support Battalion, of the Guardian Angel teams. "This is the first time I have ever trained with the Air Force, but they have impressed me with what they know how to do and how they get it done. When I deploy, it makes me comfortable knowing that someone is there who can actually take care of me and get me back home."

In May, the Alaska Air National Guard's 210th, 211th and 212th Rescue Squadrons and the 3rd Battalion, 8th Marine Regiment based out of Camp Lejeune, N.C., deployed to Afghanistan in support of Operation Enduring Freedom. ■

Veterans

HONORING THOSE WHO HAVE SERVED

By Verdie Bowen, Veterans Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... In the past year, Alaska veterans have received some of the most comprehensive legislative packages honoring their service.

The GI Bill was enhanced adding the trades/distant learning/vocational rehabilitation provisions to the benefits of eligible service members. Tax breaks for businesses that hire veterans were passed in the state Legislature and in Congress. In addition, a seamless medical records system between the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense was designed, improving the transition from active duty.

Alaska is the first in the nation to have the VA and Alaska Tribal Health Programs sign a medical sharing and reimbursement agreement. The agreement will strengthen both the VA and ATHP, help increase access to care, and enhance continuity of treatment for eligible Native and non-Native veterans close to ATHP services, particularly those in remote and rural areas. The best way to think Gratitude. During the Rural Providers Conference in Dillingham in late May, Alaska Governor Sean Parnell and Major General Thomas H. of this initiative is that our veterans in Alaska will finally have VA-covered health care where they live.

With this new reimbursement agreement in place, the next step is to increase outreach all across Alaska. The 2013 Veteran Service Officer grants will reflect this effort by an increase in travel funds. When the VSOs are out in the community, they will be asking veterans to fill out a VA form 1010EZ, which registers veterans for VA medical privileges. This will greatly help veterans and the community. ■

New Educational Funding Helps Veterans Return to Work

By Veterans Affairs Staff

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... A new federal program is in place to help train and return Alaska's veterans to the work force.

The Veterans Retraining Assistance Program offers education benefits to eligible veterans ages 35 to 60 and took effect July 1, 2012.

VRAP is available for those veterans who are:

- At least age 35 but no older than 60 years old
- Unemployed
- Discharged other than dishonorable
- Ineligible for other VA education benefits or in receipt of VA compensation because of unemployability
- Not enrolled in a federal or state job training program

"We want nothing more than to put Alaska's veterans to work," said Verdie Bowen, director of Veterans Affairs for the State of Alaska. "With the current economic conditions, this piece of legislation is perfectly timed to provide a funding source to ease the financial burden for those eligible so that they may retrain and find new employment opportunities."

VRAP will pay 12 months of payments equivalent to the prevailing Montgomery GI Bill monthly rate for eligible veterans enrolled in an approved program of study. The Department of Labor will provide employment assistance to every veteran who participates, upon completion of the program.

VRAP is just one section of the comprehensive "VOW to Hire Heroes Act of 2011" signed into law November 2011 by President Barack Obama, aimed at ending veteran unemployment. The program is available to 45,000 participants nationwide from July 1, 2012, to Sept. 30, 2012, and 54,000 participants from Oct. 1, 2012, to March 31, 2014.

Visit <http://www.gibill.va.gov/VRAP> to learn more and read the frequently asked questions about VRAP. More details about VRAP, including information on how to apply, will be published at www.gibill.gov as they become available.

The point of contact for the State of Alaska Office of Veterans Affairs is Mercedes Angerman, (907) 428-6513. ■

The Moving Wall Arrives in Alaska: Paying Tribute to Vietnam Veterans

Reflective Tribute. The Moving Wall, a half-scale replica of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C., glistens on the Delaney Park Strip in Anchorage in June.

Friends and Comrades. Wayne Stackhouse spends time looking at the names of the Soldiers he served with while deployed to Vietnam in 1967.

Remembering Those Lost. Vietnam veteran Kenny Holm, right, gets help copying names off The Moving Wall of fallen military members he served with in Vietnam.

Never Forgotten. The younger generation takes time to honor military members killed in action during the Vietnam War whose names are listed on The Moving Wall in Anchorage.

Searching for Fallen Friends. Kenny Holm searches The Moving Wall to find fallen military members he served with during the Vietnam War. The Moving Wall, a half-scale replica of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington D.C., was on display in Anchorage for about a week and traveled throughout the state for about two months.

168th Air Refueling Wing Fuels Strike Exercise

By First Lieutenant Bernie Kale,
DMVA Public Affairs

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Alaska Air National Guardsmen with the 168th Air Refueling Wing participated in a nationwide joint exercise aimed at validating long-range capabilities of several Air Force bombers and fighters in April.

Dubbed Operation Chimichanga, KC-135 Stratotankers from the 168th Air Refueling Wing, F-16 Aggressor aircraft from Misawa Air Base, Japan, B-1 bombers from Ellsworth Air Force Base, S.D., and the F-22 Raptor and E-3 Sentry assigned to the 3rd Wing at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson participated in the U.S. Strategic Command operation.

Personnel operated F-22s, KC-135s and F-16s out of Eielson Air Force Base, while E-3s and additional F-16s supported the exercise from JBER.

The B-1 bombers participating in the long-range strike exercise flew a 10-hour round trip mission from Ellsworth to strike their targets just east of Eielson. The exercise allowed the various aircraft to work together in a simulated strike environment to practice interoperability while simultaneously traveling long distances and receiving air refueling support.

"We had our KC-135 tankers up in the air refueling the aircraft involved in the exercise," said Major Scott Lanis, 168th Operations Group chief of scheduling. "Within seven hours of flight time, we offloaded 147,000 pounds of fuel."

The operation was conducted on the Joint Pacific Alaska Range Complex near Eielson Air Force Base. The 65,000-square-mile air space provides a diverse training environment, allowing pilots to train realistically and jointly in situations similar to what they'll face in combat. The operation involved numerous commands and went smoothly, according to Lanis.

"This was a total force operation with commands from Alaska all the way down to the Lower 48," Lanis said. "We were prepared and worked seamlessly with everyone to make this an all around successful exercise." ■

Family Programs

Taking Action to Serve America's Military Families

“The spirit of service and selflessness that is seen in military communities across our country represents what is best about America, and as a nation, we owe our brave service members and their families more than gratitude – we owe them the support they have earned. Joining Forces asks all Americans to take action because each of us has a role to play in reconnecting with military families in our communities.”

– First Lady Michelle Obama

CAMP DENALI, Alaska ... Joining Forces is a comprehensive national initiative to mobilize all sectors of society to give our service members and their families the opportunities and support they have earned.

Here in Alaska, our Alaska National Guard Family Readiness Groups and Key Volunteer Teams have started their own mobilization efforts to reach out to families of our deployed Soldiers and Airmen.

Organizing coffee dates for spouses to provide a mutual support and network of resources, making themselves available as a shoulder to lean on and someone to provide referrals to resources locally or through their State Family Programs office, providing communication from command, organizing annual events and providing safe places to enjoy trick-or-treating and children's holiday parties, and volunteering at camps for children are only a few efforts to reach out to our military families.

Show the nation how Alaskans love their military by showing your support to Alaska's military as an outstanding American citizen, community or business committed to supporting the troops and serving our nation's military families. For additional information contact the Alaska National Guard Family Programs office at (907) 428-6691. ■

Supporting Service Members. The Greater Wasilla Chamber of Commerce salutes community members in May for their support of military families. Of the 11 people recognized, four were Alaska National Guard family members: Lynn Assenmacher, left, wife of Senior Master Sergeant James Assenmacher, 176th Communications Flight, Alaska Air National Guard; Sasha Pohwat, third from left, wife of Specialist Peter Pohwat, B Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 143rd Infantry Regiment, Alaska Army National Guard; Lori Smith, fourth from left, wife of Chief Warrant Officer Three Peter Smith, A Company, 1-207th Aviation, Alaska Army National Guard; and Melissa Thornton, fifth from left, wife of retired Master Sergeant Roy Thornton, 176th Wing, Alaska Air National Guard.

Joining Forces:

- Brings attention to the unique needs and strengths of America's military families.
- Inspires, educates and sparks action from all sectors of our society – citizens, communities, businesses, nonprofits, faith-based institutions, philanthropic organizations and government – to ensure that veterans and military families have the opportunities, resources and support they have earned.
- Showcases the skills, experience and dedication of America's veterans and military spouses to strengthen our nation's communities.
- Creates greater connections between the American public and the military.

Employee Honored for Dedication to AMYA

By Clyde Burton, AMYA

CAMP CARROLL, Alaska ... There are exceptional individuals in life who serve anonymously. Previous to this year's Governor's Peak Performance awards, this could be said of Roman Schara, who works in the Headquarters Support Services Section at the Alaska Military Youth Academy, a division of the Department of Military & Veterans Affairs.

However, at the prestigious annual awards ceremony, held at the University of Alaska Anchorage in May, Schara was publicly honored for his work at AMYA with the presentation of a customer service award, individual honorable mention.

Schara was nominated for the customer service excellence award for his outstanding dedication and service to the staff, students, parents, mentors and other customers of the Alaska Military Youth Academy.

Schara came to state service almost three years ago and is often the first friendly face or voice a visitor or caller reaches. In addition to his daily duties in the office, he is the photographer for the academy and supports the newsletter, yearbook, academy website and Facebook page. He has also enthusiastically taken on the role of webmaster and Facebook administrator for the academy; in that role, he ensures accurate and timely web updates, as well as manages Facebook connections with young people and their parents, ensuring positive and wholesome content and communication.

Schara exemplifies the virtue of hiring military veterans in their second careers and validates AMYA's and DMVA's efforts to hire former service professionals. Prior to joining AMYA, he worked as a federal contractor with the 3rd Medical Group Surgical Suite and Gastroenterology Clinic after retiring from a 20-year Air Force career as a cardiothoracic and trauma surgical technologist.

In the military, he was rapid-deployed in medical support of the Khobar Tower bombing, was deployed twice to the Persian Gulf, once to Africa, and was in the stay-behind contingent at Keesler Air Force Base, Miss., supporting medical operations in the immediate aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

Schara's high level of professionalism, reliability and initiative are only the barest description of his value to the academy and its mission of service to the youth of our state. He gives freely of his time, imagination and extra effort while bringing a smile and a compassion for the human condition to his work.

He loves to work with the cadets, and supports them and their families by helping them stay connected through photographs, video, website and Facebook. As a direct result of his efforts on Facebook, AMYA "reaches" have skyrocketed from fewer than 800 reaches per week last year, to almost 14,000 reaches per week during this class of cadets. The total number of AMYA Facebook "friends" is now more than 400,000.

A Green Bay Packers fan for life, he loves reading, diamond willow carving and hiking with his Westie, Myscha. His inspiration at home and at work is to treat all people as he would like to be treated, with respect and compassion. He and his wife, Monica, have two daughters, Marcy and Rose. ■
